These notes deal with some of the outstanding features of Yogad, the language spoken by about 8,000 people in the municipality of Echague, Isabela, northern Luzon. During past centuries the Cagayan Valley was a centre of Spanish influence, and this is reflected in Yogad vocabulary by more than ten per cent of loans. The materials for this paper were gathered under the auspices of the Summer Institute of Linguistics during two months in 1955. Mrs. Esperanza Miranda, a school teacher, and Mr. Felipe Palayad, a retired teacher, were the informants.
